Standard Products

Until Virginia products are as good if not better than their competitors, they cannot hope to become outstanding successful as compared to other states, regardless of the system of marketing that is employed. This is the opinion held by G. S. Ralston, of the Eastern Shore Produce Exchange, who has just prepared a report for the Virginia Agricultural Advisory Council.

Balanced farms are advocated by Mr. Ralston as a means of improving methods of distribution. He says: "One hundred per cent, high grade production and standardization alone would not be enough. If all the farmers by some miracle standardize crop production, and at the same time limit production, the result would not give them the doubtful satisfaction of a duty well done but without profit."

Effective marketing, a lessening in the cost of production and a more nearly self-supporting farm can be brought about by the standardization of crops to uniform standards. He continues: "The main issue involved in standardization does not lie in making the trade understand its value. The difficulty lies in procuring standardized goods; in enlisting the understanding and active support of the farmers so that he will earnestly work to this end without constant supervision."

"Should Virginia farmers realize what self-help they themselves could give; should they take advantage of what they can do and produce a reasonable acreage of fine-quality goods well standardized, the distribution problem would in a large measure be solved."

Relief Craved

Four changes in taxation of farm property are suggested by W. E. Garnett, Department of Rural Sociology Virginia Polytechnic Institute, as a means of lowering the cost of farm products.

The first of these is a reduction in the elimination altogether of taxes on wooden land, with a substitution therefore of a severance tax when trees are cut. In explanation, Mr. Garnett says: "About 7,000,000 acres, or approximately one-third of the farm lands of the state are in woods. Such a change would not only encourage the growth of timber but would also help to relieve the farm tax burden on property which for a time may not be producing any income."

Other changes suggested are: Exemption from taxation of a certain limited portion of farm property used to a given valuation which may be covered by mortgage indebtedness.

An increase in the proportion of state support of rural schools and other local institutions.

An increase in the proportion of state support of schools would make it possible to reduce local taxes without institutions suffering, while the increase of taxes on luxuries would produce the state funds called for in the above section, according to Mr. Garnett.

In closing he says: "In making the several comparisons between urban and rural conditions, and advocating that more taxes be shifted to city industries, I have no desire to set country against city. All I am urging for is equality between the two, a thing we do not have at present."

Tucker Appreciated

(From Lexington Gazette)
Harry St. George Tucker, Virginia's representative from the 10th Congressional district in the halls of the national legislature, and his constitutional complex were given a big puff recently in the columns of the Atlantic Constitution.

Sam W. Small, writing in his columns of "Looking and Listening," took occasion to pay the Virginia congressman a tribute while commenting upon the legal profession of Georgia, its recent systems of jurisprudence and a recent annual convention of the Georgia Bar association.

Under the sub-head, "Sisian Stars of the Session," these words came from the columnist's pen: "Unless I should set out to write a biographical encyclopedia of the men of mark among Georgia lawyers, and which would make a formidable volume, I cannot venture to particularize any of them by partiality. Here I only mention those who contributed light and flavor to an unusually delightful and profitable occasion."

A blue print showing the cuts and fills and description of said property has been filed in the Clerk's Office of the Circuit Court of Appomattox in accordance with the statute in such cases made and provided. H. G. SHIRLEY, Chairman, State Highway Commission of Va. By J. W. Flood, Attorney. 25-27

"Primus inter pares, of course, was Congressman Harry St. George Tucker, as fine an exemplar of the F. F. V.'s as ever came down from the Old Dominion. He delivered a studied and scholarly rebuttal of the interpretation given by Judge Story to the 'general welfare' clause of the federal constitution. Who else should give a more reasoned and reliable judgment of what the fathers meant when they used that phrase in the constitution, than this same Harry St. George Tucker?"

"His forebears were among those who framed the immortal document. A generation of lawyers, many of whom rose to fame at the bar and in the forum of statesmanship, learned their lessons in constitutional law from this Tucker's grand father Harry St. George Tucker, at the University of Virginia, nearly a century ago. The Tucker's father, John Randolph Tucker, was one of the great Democrats and congressmen of our past Civil war era, and the author of a great constitutional treatise."

"Congressman Tucker's paper was heard with profound interest and will be studied by all who heard it when it appears in full in the report of the annual meeting."

FLYING IS FELT IN ARCHITECTURE

Roofs and Skylines Are to Be More Pleasing.

Washington—Architecture is another profession that is being influenced by the great development of aviation. This is exemplified by the design prepared by Frank H. Mortimer, president of the division of post office quarters and engineering, for the proposed new Chicago post office, which contemplates a great flat roof, 320 feet wide and 800 feet long.

The evolution of architectural styles, like all natural evolution, is a slow process following the improved needs of growing intelligence. In America architecture is less than three hundred years old. In this period it has progressed from the log cabin to our modern monumental buildings. It took 1,000 years to produce the Egyptian temple, 500 years to build the Greek temple and 300 years to erect imperial Rome, and never were the demands and requirements as many as today. In materials, in structure and in purpose, the task of the architect is increasingly gigantic, and now the architect's purpose is to be changed if not dominated by our getting into the air.

Not long ago the landing spaces are modern cities concerned. An artistic view from the air is demanded. German architects are studying the task of the architect is increasingly gigantic, and now the architect's purpose is to be changed if not dominated by our getting into the air.

Therefore we may expect roof gardens. Also we may be surprised to see some of the billboards that line the automobile trails go up and into the air, or as soon thereafter as the airplane flies the way that it is "aerated" by spilling it out on top of one of the highest buildings.

Our future cities will present an entirely different skyline, experts say. Each Gothic building as the Westworth skyscraper and those of Chicago university with points and spires and towers dominating its aviators probably will disappear.

Lieut. Bert Balchen, who piloted the giant "America" through hours of storm and fog over France looking for a place to come down, said he would like to see some of the skyscrapers and towers dominating its aviators.

"I don't think that I did not see it. I was too busy to see it. I was too busy to see it. I was too busy to see it."

Now also exhibits stones, this and found, which speculation would have as Indian poker chips. On this order there are also larger stones, apparently used for lagging for a line, much in the manner of "pitching pennies," or as target for spears.

Now's oldest relics date back four centuries. The exhibit as it now is was collected from sites. It includes arrowheads, hatchets, spears, knives, scrapers, bone, grain mortars, and bits of pottery.

The collection also harbors a Mexican spearhead from the walls of the Alamo after its fall, as well as a number of guns from past conflicts.

Falls 19,000 Feet Before Parachute Opens; Lives

Paris—Dropping 10,000 feet from a falling airplane and yet living to tell the tale was the experience of a French pilot, Emile Van Laere. An aviator, he was testing one of the latest types of parachute when, at 19,000 feet, the parachute did not open until he was a thousand feet from the ground. At that point, Van Laere was unhurt.
